quick scan through the table of contents for this Stirpes shows a review of the 2016 conference, a humorous look at census enumeration, another valuable index for a book with statewide appeal, and a great deal more.

The overall theme of this issue is the explosion of interest in preservation and digitization of records for genealogy research across Texas. The demand for records by family historians and advancements in preservation technologies have combined forces to ignite a volunteer army in critical efforts to ensure records accessibility.

Preservation takes many forms, including planning and organizing your personal archive, researching and understanding details concealed in old family photos, recording your family narrative, and securing your genetic past through DNA testing. Articles in this issue show examples of using traditional methods for preserving your history as well as ways to take advantage of the latest technology.

TxSGS and FamilySearch are using newly developed cameradriven digitization kits manned by volunteers. Concerned citizens in Partner Societies and libraries are contracting with the Portal to Texas History and others to digitize, index, and mount local newspapers online. Film preservation reaches into family film vaults with efforts by the Texas

Archive of the Moving Image. Genealogy Backroads visits a small town museum protecting the record of its pioneer families.

Everything is coming together at the right time: money, volunteers, interest, time, and the burning urge to act before it's too late. We are fueled by the knowledge that time is running out either because of the fragility or unanticipated loss of records. Throughout this issue, TxSGS highlights a number of ways to join this army. What can you do to preserve your local records? Consider your options and join today – TxSGS wants you!

Membership Benefits Found at New Portal

This summer, TxSGS launched a new membership portal based on NeonCRM software from Z2 Systems to enhance member's experience and access to TxSGS. The portal was used for conference registration; very few problems were encountered even though it was our first experience with Neon's registration process. Every TxSGS member has an online account created from our membership data. Many members have already accessed their accounts, creating a username and password.

For those who haven't yet accessed their account, the process is very easy. Access your account for the first time by going to www.txsgs.org and selecting "Members Site Log-in" in the pull-down menu "Membership and Support." At the Members Site Log-in

by Scott Fitzgerald, TxSGS Fellow

\(\) t first glance, the name of the TxSGS quarterly might appear as "Stripes." Stripes or Stirpes, the name of our publication generates quizzical looks and questions.

My first introduction to the word "stirpes" was at my present job with a law firm normally involving the preparation of a will. The phrase '... to my heirs, per stirpes" means that the legal heirs share their inheritance based on their relationship to the deceased. For example, if the deceased had only two children and both are living, they would share the inheritance one-half each. If one of the children was deceased and had two children, these grandchildren would share

In the September 1964 Volume 4, Number 3 issue of Stirpes is the following: "The Texas State Genealogical Society Quarterly, Stirpes, name was chosen by the first editor, Miss Mildred Dulaney, a former director of the Waco (Texas) Public Library and at present an executive of the Fort Worth Public Library and an avid genealogist. Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed., St. Paul, Minn., West Publishing their deceased parent's one-half equally.

Co., 1951) defines the word stirpes as "Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family." Webster's Collegiate Dictionary defines "stirpes" as "Stock, race, family, with the pronunciation as follows:

1960-2010 — Waco

TSGS Celebrates its 50th Anniversary

STÛR'PEZ"

A review of Stirpes definitions yielded the following:

Stirps, sturps, n. pl. stir · pes, stur'pēs [L.stock, stem, root, race, family: cf. extirpate.] A stock; a family or a branch of a family; a line of descent; law, the person from who a family is descended. From: The Living Webster Encyclopedic Dictionary of the English Language: With a Historical Sketch of the English Language. Chicago: English Language Institute of America, 1975. Print.

> Stirpes, Lat. Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family. Taking property by right of representation is called "succession per stirpes," in opposition to taking in one's own right, or as a principal, which is termed "taking per capita." Rotmanskey v. Hess, 86 Md. 633, 39 A. 415. See, also, Per Stirpes and Representation. From: Black, Henry C. Black's Law Dictionary: Definitions of the Terms and Phrases of American and English Jurisprudence, Ancient and Modern. (1968). Print.

As we constantly pursue those who "share an inheritance based on relation to > the deceased," Stirpes is a fitting name at first or second glance. After research, genealogists realize that the term stirpes or "per stirpes" describes the core understanding of our passion in researching ancestry and family history. ✮

2016 TxSGS Family History Conference Wrap Up

by Susan E. Ball

s conference organizers and volunteers cleared the exhibit hall and boxed conference material for next year, the same remarks were heard over and over:

66 Great conference!"

66 Excellent speakers!"

66 Interesting topics!"

66 So many great choices!"

Perhaps Lisa Mahler said it best, "This is a right-sized conference. It has all the same quality presentations as a national conference, but on a more manageable scale."

The 2016 conference was our largest ever in number of speakers, number of sessions provided, and number of attendees. The conference boasted 35 speakers from across the U.S. speaking on 72 topics during six parallel tracks. The options were dazzling for the 315 attendees. Sue Kaufman, Conference Co-Chair, TxSGS Director of Education, and Manager of the Clayton Library Center for Genealogical Research, shared, "The TxSGS Conference has transitioned to a regional conference, much like the Southern California Genealogy Jamboree in Burbank and the Ohio Genealogical Conference slated in 2017 for Sandusky, Ohio. We are thrilled to provide a top-quality conference for Texas genealogists that is easily accessible to anyone in the state."

According to Randy Whited, Conference Co-Chair and TxSGS President, "Our goal when planning this conference was to offer a diversity in speakers, a diversity in voices, and a deeper experience in analyzing records than those we already know. That's why we had such strong African American and Hispanic records presentations. The African American topics especially focused on DNA because it tells us stories that, due to records loss and underrepresentation, the documents can't tell us." Randy added, "If everyone attended those sessions and worked with those constraints, imagine how they would do with easier records and pedigrees."

Sue added, "From the librarian's perspective who engages people all the time, the variety of presentations people could choose from, the exposure of attendees to research methodology – the newer researchers that are ready to take their research to other levels are looking for something like this. They've gone as far as they can and are searching for new ideas and research avenues." She continued, "That's the appeal of attending a genealogy conference - people are exposed to resources that they don't know about or wonder about or might have heard about in passing and don't > know how to access. Conferences that address these types of topics create better genealogists who know how to delve deeper to develop the story beyond the simple pedigree."

The exhibit hall was one of the best ever at the TxSGS Conference. Well laid out, the exhibitors were happy with the patronage of the conference attendees. Randy shared, "The exhibit hall looked nice - it featured stalls and booths, not just a set of tables. I was very happy with the exhibit presentation and attendee engagement by all of our exhibitors. Our Platinum Sponsors, MyHeritage and FamilyTreeDNA, set the tone for the exhibit hall with their booths positioned next to the Exhibit Hall entrance. In addition, the Dallas Genealogical Society received a premium spot for all they did to host Research Day at the Dallas Public Library and help with the conference."

Sue and Randy both praised the banquet program. Randy remarked, "I was very pleased with how the awards portion of the banquet was run. I'm glad we were able to not only appropriately recognize the winners but to also showcase the efforts of everyone in the community for their > efforts. I especially enjoyed judging and announcing the scholarship award. Our winner, Jessica Tharp, submitted an excellent application with an outstanding essay on the importance of family history research."

Everything learned at the 2016 TxSGS Conference is being applied to plans for the 2017 Conference slated for Houston. Randy stated, "We're very happy with the present threeday conference format and our ability to provide national quality presentations from a diverse group of speakers to our attendees. We're planning to build on our experience from this conference and the 2015 event in Austin to provide an outstanding conference experience for all genealogists - those living in Texas and those researching Texas ancestors." \Rightarrow

Texas Institute of Genealogical Research

TxSGS is thrilled to announce the launch of the first ever week-long genealogy institute focused solely on Texas records. TIGR, the Texas Institute of Genealogical Research, is slated May 22nd through the 25th at the Thompson Conference Center at UT Austin. This intensive educational experience focuses on Texas records and research spanning early Spanish exploration and colonization through the Texas Republic and beyond.

According to Kelvin Meyers, TIGR Coordinator and author of the NGS Research in the States Series for Texas. Research in early Texas has its own unique issues. The Spanish and Mexican legal systems are quite different from the British common law system found in early America: social/family customs of these early settlers differed as well. Successful genealogical research during this time period will depend on the researcher's awareness of these differences and knowledge of both systems.

Meyers noted that programs offered by other research institutes feature excellent Southern U.S. research tracts, but these unique aspects of Texas research are not addressed. TIGR offers Texas researchers a week-long records immersion that addresses distinctly Texas issues. "The difference between this and a national conference is the focus on the records in one of the places your ancestors lived," Meyers remarked. "You're not only applying methodology to Texas records, you're looking at the distinctive aspects of researching Texas records and applying techniques necessary to maximize your results."

The Thompson Conference Center at UT Austin is conveniently located near top Texas records repositories such as the Texas General Land Office, the Texas State Library and Archives, the Dolph Briscoe Center for History, and the Bullock State History Museum. To receive updates about TIGR (including when registration opens), please visit our TIGR web page (http://www.txsgs.org/texasresearch-institute/) and sign up to join our TxSGS Email List. *

GPGS Proves PCS's Worth in Pilot Project

by John Wylie, PCS Committee Chair and District 21 Representative

The Grand Prairie Genealogical Society was chosen to transform TxSGS's vision of a Preservation Capture System (PCS) from concept to reality. They were selected for this honor because GPGS enthusiastically embraced their role as developers and beta testers of the PCS, providing many volunteer hours in the process. In addition, the Chair of the PCS Committee is a member of the society and guided GPGS through the process of designing the PCS and identifying appropriate records for imaging in the pilot project.

The Grand Prairie Genealogical Society is ideally suited for the pilot project. A suburb of Dallas-Fort Worth, Grand Prairie has a population of 180,000 and records that haven't been digitized or microfilmed by FamilySearch. An active society with about 70 members, GPGS supports the Roots Room, a genealogy library of about 3000 books in the Grand Prairie Main Library.

For the pilot project's digitization effort, the Grand Prairie Independent School District (GPISD) graciously provided a little-used 600 square foot library building built in 1954 (Figure 1) that GPGS used as the pilot project headquarters. GPGS volunteers cleaned the building and modified it for pilot project use. The GPISD recently informed GPGS that the building could be used indefinitely and also requested that GPGS digitize some of the school district's historical records. GPGS has worked hard to make the building a better workplace for its volunteers. Most volunteers are retired so GPGS volunteers even painted contrast stripes on the edges of steps (Figure 2).

The initial step for the project team involved designing the PCS stand on which the digital camera would be mounted. TxSGS purchased a Sony A7r camera on 30 April 2016 and GPGS started shooting the next day with the camera mounted on a wooden prototype frame (Figure 3). The Portal to Texas History staff and FamilySearch experts emphasized that professional lighting was essential. The best camera shooting in inferior light will still produce an inferior image of a precious historical document. The GPGS design crew started with professional studio lights mounted in a location that preliminary analysis deemed best; several changes were made in camera and light positions before achieving the optimal configuration. This was no small task and accounted for about 250 hours of building and testing before final dimensions were set and an extruded aluminum stand from "80/20.com" was ordered (Figure 4).

The first set of records shot were the Grand Prairie Tax Rolls, 1913-1977 (Figures 5, 6, and 7). Although as a matter of policy FamilySearch does not digitize tax rolls after 1900, genealogists know how important 20th century records are to family historians. These are the types of records that the PCS can help preserve for future generations.

Starting in May, with 12 hours of shooting each week (Figure 8), GPGS has preserved about 42,000 images: 26,000 tax roll pages and 16,000 of various Women's Club scrapbooks filling 2.3 terabytes of storage. There's currently enough material in the digitization queue (Figure 9) to occupy the PCS and GPGS volunteers through March 2017.

Tax roll images are shot in RAW format, the highest resolution images digital cameras can produce. The high resolution RAW format is required for optical character recognition (OCR) and for group photos. Many of the scrapbooks are shot in JPG, a compressed image. GPGS tallied volunteer hours spent on the pilot project but never measured volunteer productivity. To date, GPGS volunteers have spent 250 hours designing, assembling, and testing the prototype PCS and 320 hours operating the device (Figures 10 and 11). GPGS has discovered that scrapbooks (Figure 12) are much more difficult to shoot than large numbers of nearly identical public records such as Tax Rolls. In the same time taken to shoot 26,000 images of Tax Rolls, GPGS has captured only 16,000 images of scrapbooks.

Commitment of time and dedication to the project by volunteers is key to its success. As with all volunteer projects, this can be difficult to describe and impossible to measure. Consequently, one of the most important aspects of this pilot project is the volunteer's ability to use the PCS to digitize their own private collections. The PCS Committee believes that the opportunity for volunteers to digitize their individual "shoe box" of photos and documents is an important reward for the many hours they give to the project.

As rightly advised by Linda Reynolds, TxSGS Archivist, once a project of this nature gets started, the demand will "come out of the woodwork." GPGS has an evergrowing number of public and private collections that various groups want digitized. Yet to be assessed are collections from Grand Prairie's

Chamber of Commerce, local churches, lineage societies, an aircraft company retiree association, and an historic black high school alumni association. As word gets around, more historic records will be offered for preservation by the PCS. GPGS looks forward to digitizing Grand Prairie records as long as the records are available to digitally capture and preserve. **
